HEART DISEASE
A CHILD MENACE*Now Problem Presented to Those Who Preserve Health.*TUBERCULOSIS DECREASING

Another Enemy Creeps Up Behind as Great Battle Is Being Won—Heart Trouble Leaves Child Handicapped For Life—Home Care Better Than Hospitals For Such Cases.

With heart disease spreading as tuberculosis is being curbed physicians and social workers are planning preventive work among children to cope with the rising death rate. An article on this menace and what experimental work has shown to be desirable toward curbing it as prepared for the Survey, an organization whose purpose is to investigate the facts of living and working conditions and to suggest means for social advance, is as follows:

Apparently while we have been fighting one enemy face to face another has stolen upon us from behind. New York has reduced her deaths from tuberculosis from 421 per hundred thousand in 1870 to 169 in 1914, but during the same time her deaths from heart disease have increased from 74 to 169.

Repeated In Other Cities.

The experience of New York is repeated in other cities. In Worcester, Mass., no less than 21.5 per cent of all deaths in the industrial population are caused by organic heart disease; 15.2 per cent is the proportion for the whole population of that city.

The situation, or, rather, the realization, has come upon us suddenly, and we are not equipped to deal with heart disease as we are with tuberculosis. Yet it is clear that we shall have to cope with it and devote to it the same study and the same persistent effort to get at underlying causes as we have given to tuberculosis ever since the eighties.

Several articles recently written for medical journals show how similar are the methods needed for the prevention and cure of heart disease to those we are familiar with the case of tuberculosis. In both it is in childhood that preventive work is most needed; in both the symptoms are slight and latent, and the treatment must be prolonged and persisted in after all signs of real trouble have disappeared. Both depend greatly upon environment for cure, and in both home care is beginning to take the place of institutional care.

Leave Child Handicapped.

Both leave the child handicapped and needing vocational training in some occupation which will not make too great demands on his strength.

The Massachusetts General hospital, Boston, has been making an interesting experiment in the home care of children with heart disease and with diseases which threaten the heart, such as chorea and rheumatism. At first these children were kept in the hospital for weeks and even months, but the results were discouraging. When they went home not only improved, but usually looking in the best of health, it was impossible to make the parents believe that the greatest care was still necessary. So relapses came, and the children returned to the clinic sometimes in a worse condition than before.

The physicians realized that "heart disease is a social disease and must be treated socially. The child and his family must be educated, his environment must be altered and adapted to his limitations, and he must be kept under supervision for a long period, not merely until he has recovered from the acute symptoms."

Home Care Best.

So in 1911 a social worker was secured to supervise the home treatment of these children. The results have been so gratifying that home care has been substituted for hospital care for all but the acutely sick.

There is not nearly so much danger of relapse if the child has been in his own home from the beginning and his parents have had the care of him during his sickness and have gone through the long, tedious process of nursing him back to health. There is no need then of readjusting him to his old environment, and there is much less difficulty in adjusting the environment to him when he is really ill than when he comes apparently well. When the home is manifestly unfit, boarding the child out in another family has been found better than sending him to an institution.

The hospital chose a visiting teacher rather than a nurse, for, though there are a few medical facts which she must be able to note, they are easily learned and most of her duties are nonmedical. She must be able to arrange the home care of the child that he will have rest and quiet and yet be happily occupied, and later on she must be able to plan his return to school or his entrance into industry in such a way that it will not overtax his strength.

For the tuberculous child we have demanded open air schools; for the cardiac child we must demand school-rooms on the ground floor and ungraded classes, where he can make up his lost time without too much effort and perhaps work only half time, being dismissed before the closing hour with its rush and crowd.

A "FOR SALE" or "FOR RENT" card tacked on a post or tree in the yard is "advertising," of course; but it is advertising of an entirely too limited sort to satisfy any property owner or agent who really desires to find a purchaser or a tenant. Tell it in THE INTELLIGENCER.
